A little trip for us

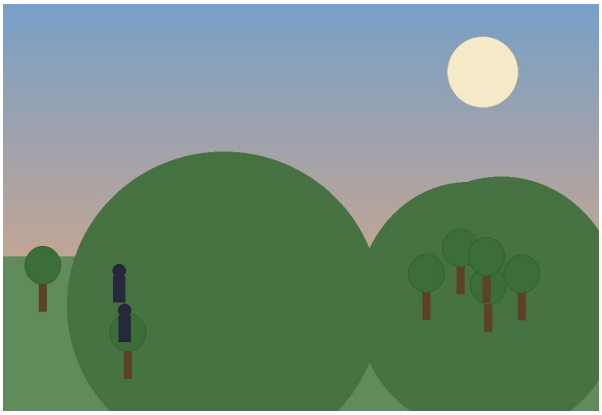

Draft plan - for you to look through when you have a quiet evening.

Hey. I've been meaning to send this for a while. I know we keep saying we'll go, and then work eats the whole month and it slips again. So I sat down one Saturday and actually tried to make it real this time - picked a place, sketched out the route, and put together a rough budget so it's not just a vibe anymore. I've saved the whole thing as one file so you can keep it and pass it along to whoever you want to bring.

I thought the coast side made the most sense. It's got that mix of the town for dinner and the quiet stretches if we want to just drive and not talk for a bit, which has honestly been the whole appeal for me. I didn't want to lock anything down until you've seen it, so treat all of this as a starting point, not a plan we're committed to.

The stretch we keep talking about - around the bend, before the town.

The kind of place I think we'd stay. Two rooms, out back.

The route I'm picturing:

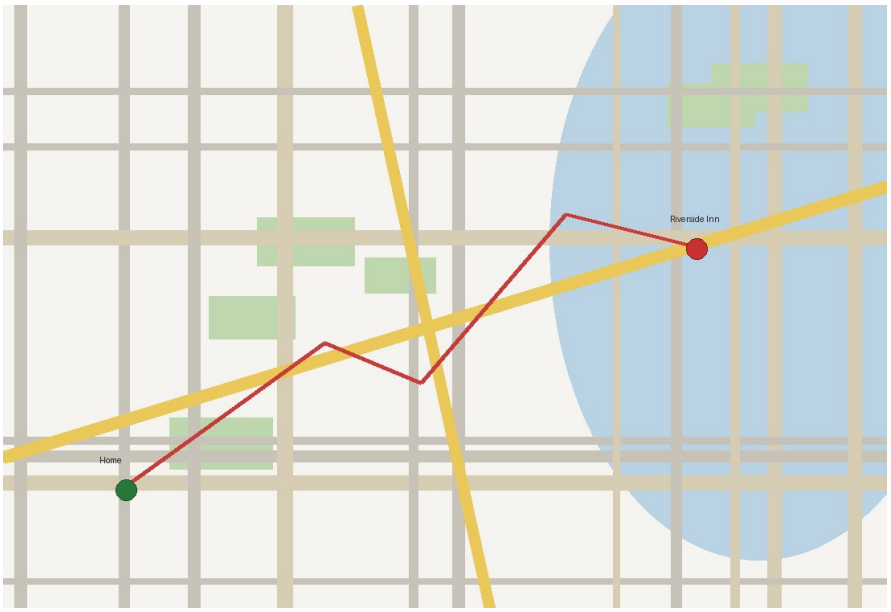

Figure 1. Home to the coast to the inn. Roughly 6.5 hours with a stop.

Rough money. I kept it loose on purpose so we're not fighting over a number:

Item	Estimate (USD)
Getting there (fuel)	142
Two nights, two rooms	460
Food	230
A couple of days around	120
A little buffer	88
Total	= 1,040

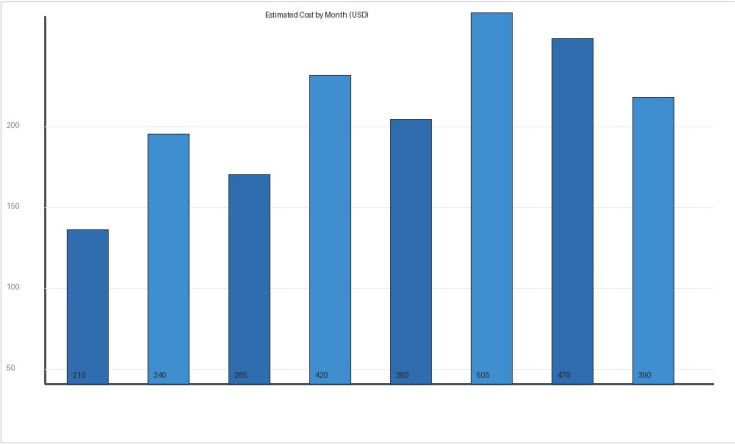

Figure 2. How I'd spread it out if we did the longer version.

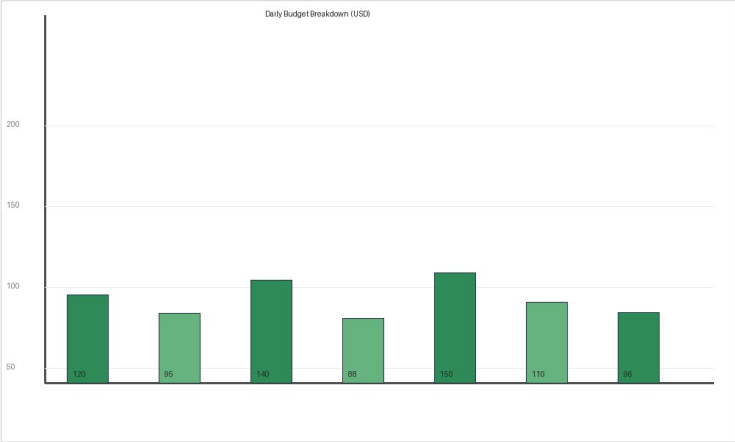

Figure 3. Day-to-day, keeping it easy.

Anyway - I don't want to make a big thing of it. Just open it up and tell me what you think. If the place doesn't hit for you we'll look at the other option, no worries. I just wanted you to have something real to look at, not another "we should go sometime."

I love you. And I'll be around if you want to talk it through, whenever.

- me